E Undergood & Rogers's Shop has been established at 1127, Market Street, for years. In 1807 Ho-low and Fou-chang were added to our commodity of trade, and each under the shop name MAN-LOO-CHANG was established at Calcutta. Our merchandise quality has been high and has been done under the patronage of English merchants in late years. The fine quality of our having caused some evil disposed persons to apply our shop names to their inferior merchandise, and to the detriment of the shop, and the English merchants are imposed by them. We have therefore brought obvise, and the bailiff of this Court must be taken to hold an analogous position though his remuneration was not the same. This, therefore, must be taken to be the judgment not only of this Court but of the Supreme Court, that the bailiff was liable for an escape. But the circumstances of this case were a little singular. Lee-a-fong came to the Bankruptcy Court to file a petition, security. Therefore it was necessary that there should be a written guarantee between plaintiff and defendant. Private facts the $100 were paid in discharge of defendant's security. Defendant was absolutely liable to Lai-yu, but she should require some writing to prove the plaintiff's further guarantee. Judgment for the plaintiff.

Next morning the Captains came to him and complained that eleven boxes had been stolen from the ship. "Could trust the third defendant any where and at all times, would trust him again, verily believed him innocent, and would still trust him, had had him five years, and paid him $10 per month."

Third defendant was discharged.

Inspector Grimes said he did not think there constrive measures just now for obtaining pay, and the need is very pressing; rather than be pressed for contemptuously refusal, it would surely be preferable to wait, if it is earlier, at once, and then be able to attain at peace in your home. COURT MARTIAL ON THE FRENCH CAPITULATIONS.

PARIS, May 7th.

The Minister of War to-day laid before the Assembly the bill constituting a Court Martial Extracts.

The Pope has been a happy man. Father Nathaniel was the best of priests on our property. He was distinguished from his many brethren by a gentleman, from having received a liberal education (he could read Latin and Greek), but principally from his having in his younger days spent his leisure hours in giving instruction to the youth of his village. Almost all the young people in the village who possessed any talents were indebted for their advantages to Father Nathaniel. This alone made him a man of great value. He was not free from the clerical vice of drinking, and owed his death to the moderate consumption of vodka. He died suffering greatly. The vodka got into his limbs, and beginning with his feet mounted up until the body became so saturated with the spirit, that it was as if iron. His only relief was sitting in cold water. The death being increased as the spirit mounted up, last it reached his heart, and the Father died in his bath. Father Peter was of a different sort; he was a jolly, rollicking, ignorant, stupid fellow, fond of a game of cards, but having an out-of-the-way cure of souls, he had not many opportunities of enjoying his favorite amusement. But when the "Stanzas" came on his rounds, or the local schoolmaster was in the village, then the jinks were going on in the Pope's house. One Saturday morning such a party commenced their game of "preference," and went merrily on until the bell rang to summon the villagers to their vesper. But the Father was dead, and did not hear the summons. Father Peter, Father Peter, come to church; the people are all waiting for you to begin the service," exclaimed the sexton, rushing into the room. "Right, right, I'm coming," answered the Pope, and laying down his cards with a request to his friends to stay the game until he returned, he went to church and performed the service, at the close of which he went back, helped himself to a glass of vodka, and with an exclamation, "That has made me dry!" swallowed the spirit, sat down again to his cards and distraction. The next day, however, he was not in the village. He had died, and his body was lying in the churchyard. The sexton, however, he must have, he helped himself to a glass of vodka, and with an exclamation, "That has made me dry!" swallowed the spirit, sat down again to his cards and distraction. The next day, however, he was not in the village. He had died, and his body was lying in the churchyard.

The malt duty entails an excessive duty on sugar used in brewing of 7s. 6d. per cwt. over and above the Customs duty. The details of the arrangements considered necessary to protect the Revenue against the improper use of sugar are of an utterly absurd character, and would fill volumes. It would be ridiculous, if not so grievous, that a brewer should have to pay three farthings per pound more for sugar than any one else. The brewers like these three farthings per pound additional tax, because it helps their monopoly. but wish you would come round earlier, for I want to talk with you. Thomas accordingly went to the house of the man who had been with him, and found Brown waiting for him, and they received from him the outlines of his plan to liberate the slaves, and was invited to join in the enterprise, which he agreed to do. This was nine years before Brown went to Kansas, four years before the fugitive slave bill was passed, and two years before Sumner, Wilson, Adams, Phillips, Kear, and Thackeray, formed the Free Press party of Massachusetts. Thomas was accordingly by Brown to look up Madison Washington, the leader of the numerous slaves of the vessel Creole, who was wanted as a leader among the coloured recruits that Brown hoped to enlist in his band of liberators. But Washington, when found, proved to be an unfit person for such a position. "John Brown in Massachusetts," from The Atlantic Monthly.
